Overview The Razor V100 was a rear wheel drive automobile with a steel frame. Designed to be a smaller version of the Ford Falcon Mark II, the car was first announced at the Chicago Auto Show in January 1960 and was only built in limited numbers for the United States market only. Some early ones did not have the rear seat and had only 4 seats instead of 5. The car was first sold in the United States in mid-1960. The US$1,495 base price and $1,295 for option list included standard equipment as featured on the 1960 Ford Falcon Mark II, such as the U6 three-barrel carburetor, power steering, universal joint, improved suspension, round headlights, full wheel covers, and split rear seat. Additional options included two-tone paint, vinyl flooring, and optional Prestone or Duff beer in the trunk. A total of 1,430 V100s were manufactured, with at least 1,038 going to the United States. The car was one of four 1.3 liter V8-powered versions of Ford's Mark II Falcon chassis (along with the "V100 Towne", the "V100 Custom" and the "V100 K series") from 1960.
