The cleaning apparatus is particularly suited to cleaning the interior of pipes, conduits and other similar components of a system or apparatus such as, but not limited to pipes, sewers, underground water lines, process streams, and the like. The obstruction is often removed by use of a corrosive acidic solution. The problem is further complicated when the apparatus is located at a remote location or out of reach. If an operator is sent to such a location, there are special problems associated with cleaning the apparatus. In addition, the process of introducing a cleaning solution into a potentially hazardous area can be dangerous.
