Dataownerclub Windows Speed Up is a tool that you shouldn't ignore. This invention relates to the electronic scribing of indicia on paper sheets, particularly to the creation of uniform, computer-controlled indicia on a moving web of paper, such as a moving web or sheet of paper on a paper making machine. Data processing systems have come into widespread use in many contexts. Many applications for such data processing systems, such as a computer-assisted transaction system in a large retail store or a large transaction terminal in a bank teller line, include the need to record information which is frequently placed on signs or documents. For example, large transactions are often processed through a central transaction point and as the transactions move along in the processing chain, the indicia on each document are often scribed or otherwise created to indicate that the particular transaction is being processed at that point. A common way to achieve such indicia is to use ink or other indicia marker to inscribe or otherwise create a printed representation of the indicia on the document. However, this approach is labor intensive and, at best, is inefficient due to the irregular
