File Wiper is a small application that is designed to help users clean temporary files. To get the most out of the tool, you should set a delay interval so that you don't accidentally overwrite any files you are trying to delete. The screen below shows you the selected files (I've picked two folders with images in them). When a folder is selected, you have the choice of hard deleting the files or just moving them to the trash. Clicking on the trash option or pressing Delete keys on your keyboard will take the selected files to the trash. When you have finished deleting all the files you want to delete, click on the trash can icon again, or press Shift+Delete to "empty" the trash. If you have any files that are currently selected, this icon will turn into a circle with a cross inside, letting you know that you've selected files. The main window: The next window that you will need to use is the File Wiper Preferences window. You will need to make sure that the "Set delay before delete and move to trash" setting is set to 30 seconds (try to experiment with different settings before committing yourself). Click on the Edit button, then click on the "File Wiper Preferences" option from the dropdown menu to open the preferences window, as shown below: Configure the preferences: This allows you to select one of the two directories you want to clean up, then allow File Wiper to check both that directory and its sub-directories for deleted and corrupted files. Click on the "OK" button to save your changes. When you have finished, you should close the preferences window. Now that you have configured File Wiper, it will take two minutes to scan all of the directories you have selected. You should be able to close the application without any issues. When you have finished, open the first directory you checked, and you should be able to see that all of the files have been correctly deleted or moved. Simple, great results This tool is perfect for those who are having trouble with their temporary files; in a few minutes, you can clean up a bunch of files that have probably been left around for a long time without you even knowing. If you have used Recycle Bin before, you probably know that it allows you to restore deleted files. But when it comes to removing all traces of such files, the choice is getting narrowed down to only two programs - Delete Saver and Remove Folder. What is the essential difference between them? You may be puzzled to know that both of them remove only files, but Delete Saver is capable of removing both files and folders, while Remove Folder works only on folders. If you know this difference, it is easier for you to decide which tool you need. While removing the files, Delete Saver makes use of its own proprietary method to discover and remove all the traces of deleted files. There is no guarantee whether such a method could work or not. It may also return some undesirable results. To make things worse, there is no warning message that discloses what happens during the process. However, Delete Saver can handle all kinds of files. The other said that it is good enough to get rid of fat files that are usually too big for Recycle Bin. It is hard to believe that the tool can do the same for all types of files. Additionally, you need a significant amount of free space on your hard drive before trying to use Delete Saver, since the program refuses to carry on any task if it cannot have enough space. On the other hand, Remove Folder is a fully featured tool, and it can take care of everything you want - remove everything except files, or remove folders along with their files. It supports the following file types: .zip, .7z, .rar, .Z, .gz, .r, .ra, .3dm, .7z, .ASP, .JS, .MP3, .AVI, .MPEG, .AVC, .PVA, .M
