nfs3DTextEn (English) nfs3DTextEn (Deutsch) nfs3DTextEn is designed as an animated screensaver that displays the letters found in the English alphabet. The letters fly and create a row. Now you can use this relaxing and interactive screensaver every time your monitor goes idle. nfs3DTextEn Screenshots: PPSSPPP is a really really simple and cool game, you're playing with a sword (and not to be confused by the RPG games with the same name, because this one has no scripting or anything, just a really simple game). You're saving a princess and then she comes back to say "Thank you" and you become a hero (as well as, from the credits, the author of the game). Just kill monsters using your sword (and only your sword) and pick up coins. PPSSPPP Screenshots: Arq is a great game. I've tried some similar games in the past and liked them, but Arq is far superior. It's a puzzle game, although not one where you're trying to escape a place, it's a simple game where you jump between towers and then through tunnels. The gameplay consists of bouncing between towers and passing through the tunnel. The way the levels are done are very interesting. The way you can get the game to proceed is by manipulating the environment. Sometimes you need to push a button that opens a door and letting you into a room to do something. Arq Screenshots: The Rocket Flight Simulator game, if you want to give it a try. I find it very relaxing and interesting, but I've not played for long periods of time. It's a flight simulator. You're in a bomber and you're flying through the levels of a tower. You're taking off, and then you'll have to build up speed and then you'll reach the top of the levels. You start at the middle then. The gameplay is very good and enjoyable, and maybe too much so. The graphics are good, but not particularly great. The game starts with two levels, but after you complete the second level, you get transported to the next level. I've been tempted to just stop playing and move on, but I know that I won't complete the game. The levels are really good and fun to play. I have written some code where the points where I want to draw an ellipse are identified by a form. When I click on the form, the function gets activated, in which the codeline where the canvas gets drawn is checked. If this codeline is active, the ellipse should be drawn. By now, I can print the line I want to check. However, I don't know how I can actually draw this line. At least I think so. I have the path to draw, but I don't know how I can make it appear on the canvas. window.onload = function() { var canvas = document.getElementById("canvas"); var context = canvas.getContext("2d"); var form = document.getElementById("form"); var pic = new Image(); //Drawing a line context.beginPath(); context.moveTo(300, 50); context.lineTo(400, 100); context.stroke(); form.addEventListener("click", function() { pic.src = ""; }); }; A: I thought it would be fun to do a design thinking process to your problem, as I think it is actually quite simple and I would suggest the following solution: Create a Canvas and add an image to it Create a coordinate
