How it Works [Help:How to Read Photoshop] Photoshop is actually a group of applications under one roof that perform various specialized image editing functions. The most familiar application is Photoshop Elements, which is actually a collection of such specialized programs. However, some of these programs are included with Photoshop CS6, as well as Adobe Creative Suite. Photoshop has the ability to perform some basic image manipulation of the old-fashioned "duck-and-cover" variety. You can use Photoshop to add, subtract, color correct, and add special effects to your images. However, its ability to edit images on a layer-by-layer basis allows for much more sophistication and detail in editing an image. A Photoshop image is made up of multiple layers of media with the first layer representing the most important content and the top layers (if they exist) providing additional modifications to the image. Once you create an image in Photoshop, the image is displayed in a separate window known as the "active layer window." This window displays all of the images in the document that's currently open. Once you've created an image with Photoshop, additional, semi-transparent overlay images can be added with the "Layer" menu, and each new overlay will overlay the top image. Each of the layers can contain different types of material, and each can contain a number of unique styles. A layer is considered to be a "paper" onto which the image is "painted." To help separate the image's layers, Photoshop adds a tool known as a "path." Each path is a line that runs through the image, just as a grid or ruler would. When you create the path, you are also creating an anchor point. As you drag with the path, each anchor point is connected to the previous point, creating a thin line that runs through the image. In the layers window, you can navigate through the layers by clicking on the layer name. The order of the layers, and in which they are displayed, is determined by the order in which they were added to the document. If you need to view the top layer, you can do so by clicking on the "Layer" menu, and then clicking on the "Bring to Top" option. You can also make other layers more prominent by moving the others down in the layers window. Many of the special effects in Photoshop are actually made using the "Filter" menu. The "Blur" and

Q: How do I do page reload by using a button in Android app I am working on a VPS and my friend tried to install application and click on the request button which is there on the top. I wanted to know how to do page reload by using a button. Is there any solution other than toast or any plugin by using which I can reload the page or navigate to the home page from where he was? Any help would be appreciated. Thanks in advance. A: You could implement a web view within your application. I implemented such a view a little while ago and it worked great. This example takes the user from a web site and then redirects to the login page when they click a "go back" button. Android WebView Custom Back Button Vagus nerve stimulation for intractable epilepsy: efficacy and predictors of response. Vagus nerve stimulation (VNS) is one of several newly established surgical or pharmacologic treatments for patients with drug-resistant epilepsy (DRE). The purpose of this study was to determine whether VNS was effective in this population. In addition, this analysis assessed response predictors, including pretreatment seizure frequency. Adult patients with DRE implanted with a vagal nerve stimulator for at least 6 months were studied. Patients underwent standardized seizure frequency assessments during the 4 to 6 months preceding and at 12 and 24 months after implant. Fifty-nine patients met inclusion criteria. The mean preoperative seizure frequency was 57.9%, and 47 patients (79%) responded (reduction >50%). Fifty-three percent of patients experienced a seizure reduction of at least 50% at 12 months. Sixty percent of patients who received higher preoperative seizure frequency experienced a 50% or greater reduction in seizure frequency at 12 months. Seventy-six percent of patients who underwent VNS implantation after other epilepsy surgery demonstrated a seizure reduction of 50% or greater at 24 months. VNS is an effective adjunctive therapy for intractable epilepsy, particularly in patients with high pretreatment seizure frequency.
