"Norton AntiVirus" By using a constant power supply, the battery's internal capacitors lose their charge much more quickly than batteries that are connected to regular power. In fact, within months the nominal 3.6 volt battery in your PDA can become as low as 1.6 volts. One 1.6 volt battery cannot last as long as a 3.6 volt battery. So, if you power on a PDA that has a low battery, it is likely to shut down. And if it is more than a few months old, it is likely to be very slow. How can you be assured that the PDA will continue to operate for 6 months or a year from when you bought it? If you have a way of testing the PDA's energy level, you can do it with the Enable A/V Sleep Feature. Enable this feature, and the device will not shut down until the battery is at least 3.6 volts.
