Great WordPress.com site. Many people are suffering this year from depression, a condition that is linked to unemployment, a downward spiral in personal life and health. READ MORE: Report: One in three children on antidepressants Add to that the real and perceived economic crisis that has left millions of people unable to find work and keep a roof over their head, and the situation is affecting even the children of post-recession Ireland. The latest figures show that one in three Irish children between the ages of eight and 17 are taking antidepressants. Unemployment remains high and has risen by over 1,500 since February 2010, with Dublin, Galway and Cork being the hardest hit. 'High-income earners' A new study finds that the downturn is hardest on people who earn the most money and least on the working poor. Up to eight per cent of those earning over €60,000 annually are taking anti-depressant medications. This compares to less than one per cent of people earning less than €2,080. What is more, a significant proportion of this subset take selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors (SSRIs), the most common class of antidepressant. The report for the Irish Family Planning Association (IFPA) conducted by HSE-utilising hospital beds and department of education resources, found that one in 10 Irish children between the ages of five and 17 suffers from depression. This represents a huge increase in recent years, with just over one in every 10 Irish children prescribed antidepressants in 2008. The latest figures show that one in three Irish children between the ages of eight and 17 are taking antidepressants. The changes in antidepressant prescribing are showing the impact that the economic recession is having. From 2002 to 2008, use of anti-depressants among children rose by 141 per cent, with it peaking in 2007 at one in seven. But use has since declined and now stands at one in every four. While this is a decline it is still a significant number. The study found that one in 10 people in Ireland take antidepressants, and that, on average, these drugs are being used by just under one in every three people. According to the IFPA study, the older one gets, the more likely that an individual will be on antidepressants. This is significant as a greater proportion of older people suffer

Category:Rar! specificationsAlbum review: Homer and Jethro – ‘The Sun is Inclined to Tempt’ Artists make records to get you to listen to the album. The city of Worcester has had a pretty solid rock presence for as long as I can remember. Within those parameters, there have been many greats. Any thoughtful listener can put together a list of their favorites, but the city’s best have been few and far between. When I was a kid, I would pour over many of the new releases for Worcester and came up with a list – which was a pretty short list. However, if one of those bands has come along, it’s Homer and Jethro. The album comes from a band that sounds unlike any other band out there. They have elements of a rock band, but are not entirely of that genre. They have elements of math rock, but are not entirely of that genre. The musical style can be hard to pin down, but a listener can best know them through their compositions. They’ve created an album with a sound that will feel familiar, and yet I have no idea if I’ve heard anything like it before. The 82138339de
