Protect your pictures with a copy or text watermark Add a product or company watermark on a batch of photos Easy to use WatermarkProWin Portable Cracked 2022 Latest Version is a very basic tool that allows you to add a logo or text watermark on a batch of images that you want to protect. In order to get started with the process, you just need to add your images to the designated folder. Once that is done, you can add a watermark to all your photos. This will be done by specifying the design to use and the type of watermark you want to embed. You can choose between two distinct design options: a copy watermark or a company watermark. As for the type of watermark, you can choose between texts and images. All you need to do is to choose the location where you want the watermark to appear and then click on the watermark button to get the job done.

Q: When to use `Mono's.SelectMany` vs `Async/Await`? I want to know when it is appropriate to use `SelectMany` in the context of a MVC5 app that makes use of `async/await`? For example: `public async Task MyFunction() { var products = await _productRepository.GetAll(); // do other stuff return View(products); }` This is such a fundamental question that I'm wondering if someone could provide some guidance.

A: `Async` method is an extension method. While the `async` keyword just marks the method as one that uses `await`. Using `await` is not a requirement for using the `Async` method. I want to know when it is appropriate to use `SelectMany` in the context of a MVC5 app that makes use of `async/await`? Any code that you do in the method can use `await`. For example you can do something like this

```
public
async Task MyFunction() { var products = await _productRepository.GetAll(); // do other stuff return View(products); } You are not required to await the results of GetAll(). You can process them without them. If your code doesn't use await, then it doesn't need the Async method. A: As the documentation of SelectMany says:

WatermarkProWin is a powerful, easy-to-use image watermarking program that allows you to protect your digital images with a text or picture watermark in no time. It has a set of intuitive features that allow you to perform watermarking tasks in just a few steps. The program features everything you need to set up and perform watermarking for your image files. The basic modes can be used to set up a watermark and include an optional text watermark, an image watermark or an image with a custom text watermark. The app comes with three different location options to place the watermark on your images. The opacity of the watermark is adjustable, so you can set the transparency from 0 to 100%. Another useful feature is that you can set the watermark size, text color, and font size. Additionally, the application allows you to set a clock and to add a watermark fade. The program runs on Windows 2000, XP, Vista, and Windows 7. It also works on a portable version of Windows, and you can install it on a flash drive or a removable disk and perform watermarking on any computer, anywhere. Q: Rails 4.1 - error when updating controller when using a non-standard model I'm building a Rails 4.1 app, which has a Profile model:

class Profile "Thanks for creating your account!" else render :action => 'new' end end
private def profile_params
params.require(:profile).permit(:email,
:password, :date_of_birth, :gender, :about) end
end And adding a comment to it works fine,
too: def create @profile =
Profile.find(params[:profile_id]) @comment = @profile.comments.create(comment_params)
respond_to do |format| if @comment.save
format.html { redirect_to @profile, notice:
'Comment was successfully created.' } format.json { render :show, status: :created, location: @profile } else format.html { render
:new } format.json { render json:
@comment.errors, status:
:unprocessable_entity } end end end But, when I edit a profile and want to add a new comment, I get this error:
ActiveModel::ForbiddenAttributesError in

ProfilesController#update

ActiveModel::ForbiddenAttributesError: I've tried this (and other similar variations): def update @profile = Profile.
