This is a work in progress for a small, portable program to manage your tweets. I wanted a twitter client that i could easily have on me at all times, where I could go through my tweets, reply to them, retweet them, etc. In the long run, i would like to expand this to have my entire life's tweets on one single page of a giant twitter feed. This is just a place for me to start. For now, this is what i've come up with: This is a python application that is quite limited in functionality, but I will be expanding it as time goes on. The point is, it's a twitter client! And I also have a version for iTerm and Terminal in case you wanted something cross

Sql View Diff Description is a set of utilities for comparing two SQL Server databases and giving you easy access to the results. It allows you to quickly and easily compare and synchronize SQL Server databases. Sql View Diff Description comes with a 'Compare' utility that allows you to quickly compare the structure, schema and contents of two SQL Server databases. It will also help you to synchronize the contents of SQL Server databases by comparing the data content of two databases and, if desired, inserting the data of one database into another. Easy to use (Image), it is up to you to decide how to display the results. You can have the results displayed in a visual way, or in a table. By default it will display in a table, but if you wish to change it, just change the 'table' option and you're done. The Practice of Anesthesia in the 19th Century. This article will examine the practice of anesthesia in the nineteenth century, focusing on the surgical schools of Edinburgh, London, Paris, Munich, Berlin, Vienna, Prague, Warsaw, and Zurich. The essay will look at the early anesthesia innovations, the rationale behind the early clinical trials, and the role of the learned societies, which were instrumental in stimulating research. Although some advances in anesthesia practice were made in the nineteenth century, the experience of anesthesia remained extremely unpleasant for patients.
