Of course, because the issue is of a personal nature, the school board may have some discretion to choose the wording of its policy, but the use of terms such as 'implicate' or 'accused' or 'suggestion' would not be advisable, unless the issue is not, to be frank, that serious, or if the individual has a strong record of good behaviour. And finally, the policy is much better described as one of 'civility' rather than 'due process': In a crucial paragraph, the school board explains that its main concern is 'avoiding a lack of civility in the handling of accusations', which is good news. However, the policy then continues by stating that 'as in other cases where due process may be applicable', and refers to the concepts of 'hearings', 'law' and 'evidence'. At first glance, this appears a bit odd, because it appears to substitute the concept of 'civility' for the concept of 'due process'. However, if

Hopeless Kitchen UPDATE: Sunday, November 9: Horrid Hour is now available for free on the App Store. Oh horror, I've gone and done it again! Offered for free are quite a few bargain game apps and I know you won't want to miss a single one of them. It's the Horrid Hour on X-mas Day after all. Oh, and there's a new version of Time Travelin' for free. So check them out now. Just a reminder that all the apps listed are free for today (or last-minute download). It's too bad this game didn't sell better. I just think the concept is a little weird, that dinosaurs are so deep rooted in this game. Maybe if the game was optimized better (like a couple of other similar games), this
