*Please wear headphones/earphones when you listen to the trailer. How to play 1. Put on the headphones. 2. Select "English" or "Korean" to play the file. 3. Enjoy the "drama" while listening to the headphones.Tuesday, August 22, 2008 Cities of Stone When you first see the façade of this house, it is entirely innocent. Adorned by a tidy lawn and lovely flower garden, the main house and its detached guest cottage lie seemingly at rest in green space, basking serenely in suburban tranquility, waiting for you to discover their secret. No sooner has the visitor's first glance strolled over the lawn and round the corner towards the front door, when the lawn abruptly ends at a dry and dusty, half-acre plot of land. This is the City of Stone. A shimmering canopy of contorted branches, paths criss-crossed with branches, trunks and roots, rise to the invisible sky, all draped with mysterious stones. A trail of rills and trickles, drips and evaporates, flows and meanders through these frozen lifeways. A haze of ice, ice vapour and sparkle surrounds every truss and stem. Who knows what secrets lie beneath the snow and ice? Here is the City of Stone. You must discover the hidden codes in these patterns and cracks. You must read the signs in the rocks. You must decipher the code and cipher to discover what lies beneath the frozen icy facade. Who said the City of Stone is only found in Antarctica? In 1951, the geologist, Marion Goundrey-Smith visited an abandoned gold mine in Nevada. The mine had been abandoned for many years, and was in a parched expanse of the Mojave desert. The only thing that moved, apart from the wind and sand, was the cold. The geologist was astonished. She had never come across a site with such an extensive collection of petrified and preserved trees, rocks, lichens and vegetation. It was then she came across the word 'city', and the term 'petrified forest' was coined. Since then, fossilised cities have been discovered in England, Scandinavia, California, Mexico, Siberia, Brazil, China, New Zealand, and many more. Although the term petrified forest is more often used than petrified city, the same c9d1549cdd

I've played video games, but I'm no good at them. As a child, I spent countless hours playing in my room with NES, Genesis, Game Boy, and Super Nintendo. My gaming prowess grew to a point where I would be able to play on anyone's game console and level with top players. But after a certain age, video games became a refuge from the world, and for most of my adulthood, I didn't even think about gaming as a hobby, much less a career choice. One day, though, the urge to play became irresistible. I had nothing planned, so I went to a local GameStop and bought myself a handheld game system called the Nintendo DS. Now I was out of excuses. I sat down, fired up the DS, and started to play Pokemon Crystal, but before I could fully immerse myself, my friend showed up to play. We played, talked, and talked some more, and I realized I had found a calling. It was a fun, innocent, and truly random experience, but I knew it was something more. That's when my obsession began. I knew that I loved video games, but I didn't know what the hell I wanted to do with that love. I soon realized that making video games was a more natural way of expressing my art than going to art school. At first I worked on some side projects. I made experimental games, some of which were pretty damn good. But the only game that really made it to market was a little puzzle game called Portal which I co-developed with a friend. We released Portal for iOS and Android, and the game quickly gained popularity. I was on the right track. I was moving forward as a developer, and I was doing it for love. Not to brag, but some of my games made the headlines. Portal, no less than 2 years later, was featured in Playboy. Not too shabby, huh? So that's how it all started. The tipping point for me was meeting that guy. He was an avid gamer who was trying to make a mark on the game industry. He was an awesome person and a great friend, but he pushed me to become more. I've been working hard on my craft ever since. I got to meet some amazing developers, and I even sold the rights to my most successful game to a really big publisher. All of that experience helped to mature me as a game developer, and I know that I can only

' featured in Mountainfest 2013 The 36-year-old British-born act is currently touring the year-round 'Jack' music festival. But how do you take a real adventure holiday without leaving your comfort zone? Like mountain climbers, we both love rock climbing and trekking and we've explored many of the established trails in Snowdonia. This time we backpacked in the Padarn Valley in southern Snowdonia, in Wales. We even made it to the top of Snowdon itself. We found that more adventurous activities are available in the excellent Snowdonia National Park and also in the sites around the Padarn Valley near the town of Llanberis. Other off-the-beaten-track options include walking in the Holywell area, located above Llanberis and not far from the Snowdon Mountain Railway, and visiting the Snowdon Llefaen National Park and the Yr Ogof Cottage near Tywyn. Sticking close to home are the easily accessible trails at Waunfawr and along the Severn Estuary. For example, from Waunfawr there are short walks along the edge of the estuary to Harlech and the old port of Aberdaron for great views. There is also a network of well-signposted trails for more ambitious hikes, including Snowdon itself, and the southern part of the Carnedd Llewelyn, which starts near Caernarfon Castle. This sort of walking is known in Welsh as 'edyrnadwy o bwyd', and it's the area in Wales most famous for its 'coast to coastline, country to country' long-distance footpaths. Over 20 separate long-distance trails will take you right across Snowdonia. Alternatively, you can simply cycle or walk the trails at Powis Park near Beddgelert, where you can even cycle or hike through the historic Brecon Beacons National Park. And, of course, there are the stunning cliff and coastline walks that will leave you breathless. Often you can spot golden eagles, lammergeyers, basking sharks, seals and even whales. And the best way to see a bit of wild Wales is to take a boat trip - whether you go by sea or by a post river-boat cruise. Cruising up the Llyn Peninsula is particularly good - you can see from the harbour

My name is Andrey, the chiptune artist behind all of this. I have been working on this game for over a year now, and have been a big fan of the genre since the golden age of 16 bit. I wrote the story, and wrote the music, programmed the game and did the audio mixing myself. I truly hope you guys enjoy this game. -**Spoiler Warning, there will be spoilers in this video** The games story is really about a small group of people, fighting for their survival and other people's for their own sake in a world collapsing from a plague of swarms that has taken over. Swarms are gathering in the night sky to return to the earth. They are the defiled. They are the end. The last of the fall of man. You are the last remaining member of a once powerful order. You have been given a set of unique special abilities and a tracking device that lets you see all of the other survivors in the valley below. You have a limited amount of health and a limited amount of mana, which is the special resource that you have to use to active your special attacks.
