');The high-altitude and high-elevation (HAHE) regions contain about 1~4.5% of the global land area, and are characterized by a relatively cold and dry climate, alpine conditions, high solar radiation, low temperatures, and an extreme low-pollution environment. In China, the HAHE regions account for more than half of the total area and 80% of all Chinese forest. The moths and butterflies in these regions mainly originate from the source regions near the Tibetan Plateau, Mongolian Plateau, Altay Mountains and Qinghai-Tibet Plateau. Since they are rich in proteins, minerals, vitamins and other bioactive substances, caterpillars are important protein and bioactive substance reserves and rich sources for high-quality nutrition. The high-altitude and high-elevation forest moths, being important caterpillars of plants, belong to the Lepidoptera (silk moths), and also the family of high-altitude and high-elevation Lepidopteran host specialist moths (HELHs), being recognized as important high-altitude and high-elevation Lepidopteran resources. They can not only offer traditional views for the species diversity and biogeography in the HAHE regions, but also provide important protein and bioactive substance resources for high-temperature and poor-nutrient low-protein diet of civilians living in the high-altitude and high-elevation areas. ----- Family Subfamily

Novelistic Subgenre The Novelistic Subgenre, also known as the Urban Fiction Subgenre is a subgenre of crime fiction that "dominates the crime novel category in the United States and Britain, and to a lesser extent, in Canada and France, as well as in Sweden, Denmark, and Finland." Overview The novelistic subgenre is distinguished from other crime fiction by its gritty urban setting. Through the work of writers such as James Ellroy, David Peace, George Pelecanos, and Carl Hiaasen, this genre has expanded to have a more mainstream appeal and is represented in young adult, adult, and juvenile fiction. For example, in 2007, first place in the annual Edgar Award for Best Juvenile Fiction went to the novel By Hook or by Crook. Notable examples of novelistic subgenres include: Noir fiction Hardboiled crime novels Private eyes, usually featuring an ex-cop turned private investigator, and set primarily in New York City, Chicago or San Francisco. West Coast noir, featuring private detectives who reside on the West Coast and pursue their cases in that region. Slumming novels, which typically take place in a deprived urban environment, featuring low-life protagonists in harsh and poverty-stricken environments. These novels tend to focus on very realistic portrayal of urban life, often containing realistic, gory, and sometimes graphic violence. American noir, many of the most important classic American noir novelists (Philip Marlowe, Dashiell Hammett, Raymond Chandler, Donald E. Westlake) were actually born in places such as San Francisco, New York City, or Hollywood, but all lived in some part of the United States. Crimespree, a subgenre of American noir novels. Historical fiction Hardboiled historical detective fiction Hardboiled historical detective novels, typically set in London (or a British city like Birmingham or Liverpool), during the late Victorian and Edwardian eras (late 19th century to the early years of the 20th century). Urban historical detective fiction Urban historical detective novels, set in modern-day urban environments, during the time of the Industrial Revolution, when Britain was undergoing massive urbanization. Brigand history Historical crime fiction, set in an imaginary time, place or world (or a futuristic time, place or world) as a way to broaden and move away from the confines of crime fiction's traditional settings
