Dupuytren's contracture represents one of the most common digital deformities encountered after trauma. Current treatment options include partial fasciectomy, release of contracture cords, and release of cords through a fasciotomy. Regardless of treatment, the common recurrence is a contracture of the tendons and a shortening of the interphalangeal joint. The authors performed excision of dorsal contracture tissue using an island coverage with an extended superficial fasciocutaneous or muscle-fascia flap in conjunction with a split-thickness skin graft.
