Our most sensitive paper at present is the Calpine paper so can we please be guided on this? Regards DavidThe AYTM technique for pediatric laser laparoscopic hemostasis. Pediatric laparoscopic procedures are increasing and use of laser hemostasis is common. We present an innovative technique, the AYTM technique (Acutis-Yeon-Tan-Miotome), for pediatric hemostasis using a CO_2 laser and a surgical staple. Four- to eight-year-old pediatric patients underwent this technique for the first time from October 2001 to January 2004. The patient, operating surgeon, and assisting surgeon all participated in the technique. The incision and creation of the rectus sheath with the mucosa of the rectus abdominus muscle enables continuous and safe bleeding during the procedure. 1. Field of the Invention The invention relates generally to the field of message transmission. More specifically, the invention relates to the transmission of messages between one computer and another computer over a data communications network. 2. Background Art In the transmission of messages, there is no burden on the data processing system to store a message in non-volatile memory, such as ROM, PROM, EPROM, EEPROM, FLASH EPROM, or the like. To alleviate the burden on the data processing system, these messages are generally transmitted from a first data processing system to a second data processing system and stored for later retrieval by the second data processing system. As microprocessor technology continues to improve, the ability of the microprocessors to perform smaller and smaller tasks increases dramatically. As the ability of a microprocessor to perform data processing tasks increases, it becomes more economical for the operator of the first data processing system to transmit data to the second data processing system as opposed to storing the message in non-volatile memory. The present invention efficiently performs a method of transmitting and receiving messages from a first data processing system to a second data processing system over a data communications network.Q: TypeError: num1.push is not a function I am attempting to push an object into an array by using the push method.
