Two-photon microscopy enables visualization of deep tissue structures in living organisms. It has been used to image plants with millimeter scale resolution. Here we describe a novel multi-labeled dual-excitation technique. We show that by co-delivering two-photon excitation light at 750 and 800 nm into the animal tissue, two distinct fluorescent probes can be simultaneously visualized in living plants. We demonstrate that this technique can be applied to investigate a nitric oxide-dependent signaling pathway, leading to both morphological and physiological changes, in the above-ground parts of Arabidopsis thaliana. Using two-photon fluorescence microscopy, we were able to detect both cytosolic and nuclear signals of NO-sensitive GFP and inducible nuclear localization of superoxide dismutase in living plants. Spike Chunsoft shared its week one figures for Dragon Quest Builders, and it looks like 5,000 downloads is enough to give the game a solid start. The game has now sold five times as many copies as its predecessor, and it's getting positive reviews from fans. The Dragon Quest Builders homepage lists the game's first week numbers. It was released on December 15 in Japan, while the West will be getting a free demo tomorrow. It's the first time you'll be able to check out the builder version of the game in western territories. The report also lists five of the game's most popular screenshots. It's nice to see a lot of Chunsoft's 2D work in action, as it's less common to see the studio present more than one side of the company. Thanks to ResetEra user b7e8fdf5c8
