Transcutaneous bilirubinometry has been shown in a cross-sectional study to compare favorably with serum total bilirubin in infants and to reflect peak bilirubin values in healthy and jaundiced newborns. In a prospective longitudinal study transcutaneous and serum bilirubin concentrations in 50 neonates whose mothers were considered to have normal bilirubin levels in blood and cord sera were correlated. The correlation coefficient was  $r = 0.87$  ( $p$  less than 0.001). The slope of the regression line was found to be similar (0.84) and the intercept differed by 0.05 mg/dl. , Volume II by John Fowler This second volume of Uncanny Islands sets about to provide a long overdue antidote, a debunking of many of the myths about sea monsters and the history of India's whales. Today By late 20th-century India, a whale biologist aboard a research vessel had finally discovered the giant whales of the Indian Ocean. Vast odd creatures, if what his informants had been saying could be believed. "Most people doubt"—a press release quoted—“these tales; but recent research has proved that a whale-headed god of enormous size once plied the seas of India.” So begins John Fowler's account of the year 1770, when a “Gentleman of Note” aboard a British ship was told that the southern Indians were “the Rarest Whites in the World; they formerly differed at their Tables, that a Whale being paddled before the Boat, would lick the Boat; sometimes he would grasp the Deck-Cloths with his Tail, and tug till the Handkerchiefs are torn, and the Crew bawl at him.” That the story is almost certainly false seems not to have occurred to the interviewer, whose name, by the way, was Edward Griffith. Three days later, the interview was printed in a London newspaper. Griffith was born in India, worked in the East India Company's Circassia factory, the headquarters of a community of British and Indian traders in the Indian Ocean, and perished at sea in 1772. His obituary in the Gentleman's Magazine was redolent of a part of the country where France was still busy campaigning, Americans were still fighting Britain, Europe was in a full-scale economic depression, and revenge was sweet. Of a “Witch” who had bewitched a number of young men, the Gentleman's Magazine wrote: “That same Country is a nest of Rogues; the consequence is, that Men cut one another's Throats in Blows.” And of a Baptist minister who refused to drink anything after the First Sunday of the Month when he visited a sick friend from the parish, “Here the Image, they say, was some time maintained”; and of a certain Mrs. Scott who refused to see an embalming doctor because “the Man told her there was only a minute before her Friend was as
