The present study was undertaken to evaluate whether GABA-mediated transmission is involved in the pathophysiology of acute cerebral ischaemia. In the rat, after a 2 h unilateral carotid occlusion, we recorded extracellularly in anteroventral nucleus of the thalamus the output of 6-Hz rhythmic bursting from the primary motor cortex, and the amount of spontaneous 5-Hz rhythmic gamma-frequency (30-80 Hz) activity before and after picrotoxin (3-10 mg/kg i.v.) or bicuculline (30-200 micrograms/kg i.v.). Picrotoxin caused a significant and dose-dependent increase in the output of the primary motor cortex and a marked reduction of the amount of spontaneous 5-Hz rhythmic gamma-activity. Bicuculline (200 micrograms/kg i.v.) produced a dose-related inhibition of the output of the primary motor cortex and a clear increase in the amount of spontaneous 5-Hz rhythmic gamma-activity. The effects of picrotoxin and bicuculline were partially antagonized by 3-aminopropyl-phosphonate (20 mg/kg i.p.), a selective antagonist of the chloridedependent GABA-receptor. The results suggest a functional role for GABAergic transmission in the pathophysiology of cerebral ischaemia. You are here Pac-12 earns top spot in Forbes FYI TV Guide Las Vegas, Nev.
