He discusses the time he bought a cabin at the mine camp and went to sleep and woke up underwater. He stayed overnight. Bob adds the mine is said to be haunted. He lifts the tailgate and hears footsteps. Bob pulls the tailgate down and goes to bed. It starts to rain and he gets the cabin flooded. He talks about at times the water was up to his chest and that was before he put on his dry clothes. Bob sets up a makeshift "dry" cabin for the night. He goes to sleep and wakes up under water again. Bob sets up a comfy dry tent. He is getting some rain. Around 8:00 a truck drives up with a box of a latrine. They haul it back. Bob asks why they drag it back and forth. He goes to bed. What's new:

(video game) Color Cube is a fixed shooter arcade game released in 2007 by Westfield Capital Corporation and published by their subsidiary company, Electrominds. Developed and published in Japan, the US and Europe, Color Cube is an asymmetric shooter, where players aim to shoot vertical colored balls of light to defeat an opponent in a non-upgradable bullet-hell style gameplay. The game features a control system where movement is controlled by the firing of a two-player combination of customized firearms known as 2-Way Shooters. It was inspired by Quadrun, Rumble Run, Joypolis and Downforce. In the Japanese version, there is a new item that can be collected. The item allows the player to zoom out and change the playing field's vertical field of view. In the US and European release, which is titled S-Cube, the zoom item is replaced with a shield that allows players to block bullets from behind. A Nintendo DS version was released in Japan in 2008 and in Europe in 2010. While it is a custom game for the DS, it uses nearly identical gameplay to the arcade version. The game features improvements as well as amiibo support. Gameplay The game is an asymmetric shooter. In the Japanese version, the player is currently one of three types of characters known as 2-Way Shooters, who use guns that are connected to a trigger and can shoot on either a right, left or no diagonal angle. Players control each of the 3 directional shooting in their 2-Way shooters and press a certain amount of charge to shoot. Each person starts with 3 shots, and the player can pick the target they want to shoot as each shot is fired. A button-holding lock-on function is available if the player presses the trigger quickly. When two players start, one of the two team's players will be controlled by the left 2-Way Shooter and the other by the right 2-Way Shooter. Once a player has taken control of the ball shot(s) by pressing the trigger, the player can freely rotate their 2-Way Shooter to aim at the opposing player. Players can shoot down their own (or other players' balls) to defeat the enemy and score points for the team as well as to block balls shot by the enemy into the player's own goal. Unlike other shooters, the opponent can shoot the ball on the opposite side of their own ball. In addition, some sequences have vertical walls
