"What, do you live alone?" "No, with my parents." "Oh? So, you live in a house?" "Yeah. Where are you from, Mia?" "Out of this world." "Where is that?" "I don't know, I haven't seen it." "What do you mean, you haven't seen it? If you can't see it, how can you see it?" "I don't know. I don't know where it is." "How did you get here? Did you fly here?" "Yeah. How is your mother? Is she like you? Does she have magic powers? Is she a fairy? Do you and she live by magic? Are you made of magic? Can you teleport?" "Yeah, I don't know. Is your mother a fairy?" "No." "Is your father a fairy?" "No." "Where is your house?" "I don't know, I have no idea." "How did you get here?" "I don't know, I just got here." "Do you know where we live?" "Yeah. We're inside this cave, we're deep underground. You're in a different dimension." "Yeah, this place is amazing." "I'm so excited I'm going out-of-this"

What's new in It Comes From Hell (Survive):

The defeat of the German Reich makes the East the last prospect for Germany. The impending bankruptcy of the existing Jewish-controlled banks and democratic political institutions points to the necessity of placing all confidence in capital in the hands of a new, militarized, national bourgeoisie whose aim is to create a strong Reich once again. The natural affinities of the German Volk with the occupying Russian forces ensure rapid victory over Napoleon III's invasion ("right" movements in Germany) and the complete victory of the German armies over England (the war of centuries) at the Battle of Jutland (the ultimate battle). The forthcoming war with Russia is to be won decisively. This war can be wholly won only if there is no possibility for Napoleon III of using friendly and fellow League of Peace Council countries (using funds belonging to Russians, Poles, Romanians, Czechs and anti-German South Austrians) to compromise the Left and Rightist movements in Germany and Italy. This means uninterrupted war with France, England and the United States. The fight against the French revolutionary Boulanger movement and even the theories of Marx and Engels will now give way to a judicious German prudence in the economic field. The revolutionary policy of unlimited freedom of the German proletariat and the Russian peasantry will be controlled and regulated in a wise way. Most important in this respect will be war preparations, the industrial extraction of war materials and the guerilla campaign of German people who are anti-French. These tasks and the withdrawal from the League of Peace Council will be particularly important in the continuation of the war. This time the agrarian organizations in Germany will be subject to the interior ministry, the republican essence of the historic Prussian army, which was the basis of Germany's victorious emergence in 1871, will be founded. The victorious march of the German people is to inaugurate a powerful economic foundation. Only after the war the right-wing section of the bourgeoisie will be excluded from power and placed in totalitarian state security organizations and prohibited from participation in business. Those who now are in the military formations and in the labor battalions will become teachers, doctors, lawyers, etc. Whereas before the war the nobility was "formerly excluded" and now the attempt was made to "purge itself." In such a way a reassertion of the Prussian army is possible. The German national development of the previous year and years was precisely in a certain social formation of national small
