This is the list: li { list-style:none; background:fuchsia;} a b c How do I go about it? A: You can use: background-color: rgb(255,0,0) Rocky Patel Fine Iberica (40 Cigars) The first time I tried it, I nearly fell over. My wife laughs every time I tell her about it. It is that good. Rocky Patel is a master blender and has spent time perfecting the medium-bodied clones for L&M. They give the Iberica a signature smooth and somewhat floral character without being too harsh. The wrapper has notes of spice, nuts, and sweet tobacco and a ton of depth. There are many different layers. It's a brilliant cigar. 40 The first time I tried it, I nearly fell over. String.format("Date: %s", date); This code returns something like this: Date: Tue Mar 21 23:00:00 EEST 2015 I want to make it like this: Date: Tue Mar 21, 2015 A: String.format("Date: %s", new Date()); A: String.format() can take not only formatted values, but you can also insert a parameter. In your case, it would be "Date: %s", date.getTime(). That will give you date as a String with commas and the correct timezone. A: An alternative to inserting an empty String between the format and its argument would be to use the String.format(Locale, CharSequence, java.time.format.DateTimeFormatter) method. With it, you can format dates by: Specifying the Locale with the java.time.format.DateTimeFormatter.forPattern method Specifying the time-zone with the java.time.format.DateTimeFormatter.ofLocale method This would return: Date: Tue Mar 21, 2015, 05:59:00 EEST Localized dates must be put into the time zone (EEST) using the java.time.format.DateTimeFormatter.ofLocalizedDateTime
