This game was created because I wanted to show you that the music in video games (like in other media) can be created by humans, and can also be improved by users. This game has been inspired by the platformer Braid and the game developer Wendy Carlos. The main idea of Braid is to think about the potential of the gameplay, and recreate that using dynamic music. The idea of Wendy Carlos was that there are many songs that have the same melody, but different chords, and of course the melodies and chords are all distinct. This means that given a melody, if you change the chords, the melody changes as well. I thought that if you had a music engine that allows you to change chords easily, that you could bend the music to any shape you want. The genesis of Smasher was a rejection of the "poor game" syndrome. That is, instead of making a game that only has one style of gameplay, a game that works great on one aspect, you can make a "multi-genre game" and you can make a game that suits your style of play. Smasher was a game that I made for myself, but I think it has a lot of potential. How do you define a game? A game is when you have a goal, and you can change the system in order to get closer to the goal. For example, a simple goal for me might be to "get home". In order to get home, I need to get past obstacles and enemies. There are many ways to get home. I could try and find a secret passage, then I could hack a door. At this point, I am somewhere else, so I need to find another exit, then another, and then I can get home. I can be continuously prevented, and there is no pattern to how this will play out. It doesn't matter whether you have linear gameplay or non-linear gameplay. If you have a goal, then when you come to a system that prevents you from reaching that goal, you can apply new gameplay mechanics that would not have been possible in a straight linear game. The gameplay is non-linear, but the game is a linear adventure. The goal is linear, since the home screen is a destination, but the gameplay is non-linear, because what happens on the way is determined by the player's choices. How do I know if I am getting closer to reaching the goal?

Arr! This is "Hop", a whimsical and challenging single player puzzle game. You jump onto the game board and help Skip and the Thump sprites make it to the finish. But beware, the red Thump can knock you off your turn and into a blackout. Have you got what it takes to leap over those obstacles and out-hop Skip? What the reviewers are saying: -"I just finished it and it was fun and challenging." -"It's a fun strategy game that really

Game "Dungeon Manager ZV2" includes the Original Game "Dungeon Manager ZV2" with the "Exoantion Pack" as a new expansion. The game „Dungeon Manager ZV2“ is a dungeon-management game that can be played in two modes: o An adventure mode in which the player can create dungeons for his creatures in his backyard and thereby save his precious time, o A training mode where you have to guide your creatures to a resource location such as a gold mine. There are two ways how you can fulfill your task: o With an assistant on your side, or o By yourself. You will get into action not only with your creatures but also with your monsters. You can hunt for your gold, food, or materials, or you can be a politician by controlling your creatures, controlling a crowd, or a general. You are offered a variety of creatures in a number of breeds. Each of them has a hidden skills. You will have to create efficient dungeons and even breed new and more powerful creatures. You can attack the monsters of your opponents in different ways by using the elements of your dungeon and your monsters. You will also have to make decisions about your strategy. Your creatures will eat vegetables, fruits, and meat from animals, depending on their group and their breed. Your creatures will even reproduce. You will have to allocate your money, resources, food, and medicine, and decide which costs you can bear. At some point in time your creatures will have to go on vacation or for a quest. You will have to pay wages and will receive the fruits of their labor. You will also have to decide in what order you will have to search for the various resources in the dungeon. You will have to make decisions about whether you need to make other creatures before they have completed their previous tasks, or whether it would be better to make them first and then make them work, and so on. You will have to think about the reoccurring costs such as animal feeds, you will have to be careful about which costs you are able to bear, and of course you will have to make sure that you will not run out of money, since there is no further expansion of your farm outside of the cavern in which you built your starting farm. You will have to have a lot of patience, since every decision has consequences. Your creatures will grow older

by Angelina Hames is a fun resin doll Keri Keri, 25: "She has just the character of the kind of girly-girl we all loved at age 13. A lot of the original designs are boxy and clay-based but she has the kind of curves we all went for as a teen." Editor's Picks Welcome to our website dedicated to plastic toy collector Christian Asbjørnsen and his collection of Castor plastic toys. Christian has been collecting the Castors since 1986. Q: IE rasterizing web clipart with Box-Filling pattern? We are looking to take a white background image, add a two-pixel black border, and retain transparency, and have that background image be layered on top of an opaque background. The problem is that IE8 rasterizes web clips, so we end up with white in the corners and transparent in the center if the image is not anti-aliased. Even if you should apply the `border-color` CSS property to a circle as well, the transparent center still appears dark, and any transparency you apply will be lost when the clip rasterizes. Anyone have any ideas that would solve this issue? I can't seem to find any good examples of IE rendering solid backgrounds that use images. A: Ideally you want to use layer background properties instead of ImageMap on IE6-8. I think IE6 and earlier refuse to obey those settings. Try it on a hidden div and see if that works.

Q: How do you disable a turned off alarm? I am using an Android 4.1.2 Nexus 4 phone. When the alarm goes off I have to manually switch off the alarm via the notification bar (check the switch off button). This is a bit of a chore for me if I am in the middle of the night in bed. I am wondering if there is anything within the Android SDK which will allow me to "force turn off" the alarm? Note: I am using Caves of Qud is a dark, spiritual roguelike with features rarely found in modern RPGs. These features are purely optional, allowing players to have a choice in how they play. - Escape From Prison: The titular game is a prison escape in which you must use your wits to escape the prison and save a dying man. Your first quest is to find a key that will help you escape. But there's no way out without the key! - The Maze: A psychic robot watches over the Caves, constantly on the lookout for trouble. Unfortunately for the people of the Caves, the robot's programming does not allow for loyalty... and besides, there's no way out of the maze! - Demonic Possession: A large group of cultists has planned a ritual that will release an ancient demon from his prison and make it free. The demon wants you and is willing to do anything to possess you. - Blood Magic: The Caves of Qud has made an unholy pact with the Brotherhood of Blood, a group of sinister necromancers that have joined forces with your character. They'll show you gruesome, high-powered necromancy at your command. "There's a sense of magnificent history to dredge from its depths." Kill Screen "Caves of Qud is one of the best roguelikes in years, packed with evocative prose and featuring a captivating world of arcane secrets to explore." Kotaku "Narratively, this is one of the most compelling game stories that I've seen in a long time."
