New ball physics delivers more control and speed. Player Impact Engine delivers cinematic simulation. New dynamic atmosphere FIFA 21 is the first title in the series that integrates an immersive augmented reality (AR) layer into the gameplay experience – placing the player in the shoes of a match official looking at the action from their perch. The match is rendered in full-motion video (FMV) with dynamic sideline cameramen and transparencies that are animated to match the tactical situation on the pitch. FIFA 22 also expands upon the AR use in FIFA 21, with a layer of information in the game dedicated to a wide variety of stadium features, from fans to players and vehicles on the pitch. Players can be brought to life with fully animated 3D avatars, and stadium seats, stands and flags can be customized to reflect a club’s identity. With the introduction of the new ball physics system, FIFA 22 will increase ball speed and ball control in the air and on the ground. The ball will be more unpredictable and unpredictable, allowing players to beat their opponent in a manner never seen before. The new ball physics will also make the ball feel heavier on the ground, facilitating better ball control and more attacking options. The extra weight of the ball will allow players to anticipate better shots, improving their timing and accuracy. The new “Thrust and Burn” System introduces an innovative new ball control mechanic that provides more unpredictability in the air and a new way of attacking from distance with striking accuracy. Players will be able to shoot in the air with perfect confidence, and the physics of the ball will make it impossible to predict where the ball is going to bounce. Players can use the new missile-like attribute to strike the ball with exceptional accuracy. The system will also add a new “Hover and Stun” mechanic. If a player hits the ball after it has hit the ground, it will fly back into the air in a full 360 degrees. Players must then follow the ball back into the air to make their shot. Picking the ball up and dribbling will make it easier to execute strikes with pinpoint accuracy. Both systems are designed to allow players to score goal-like goals that would be impossible in other games. Gameplay improvements FIFA 21 saw huge game-changing improvements in a wide range of gameplay features. FIFA 22 will continue to build upon the foundations set by last year’s version, making FIFA 22 even more
