In a US court case, it appears that Ford is being sued over their claims about SUV fuel economy, stating that a Ford Explorer has an extra 50% fuel economy that a comparable Toyota Sequoia. The case was filed by two Toyota owners. What are the chances of this being successful? A: The claim is that the Ford advertising about the fuel economy of their SUVs, compared to a similarly sized Toyota

Sequoia, is false and deceptive. Robert Nelson, a 44-year-old who owns a Ford Explorer, said the company's "Go Further" advertising campaign, which runs on TV and radio, was intended to entice people to buy SUVs. "It sounds good," he said. "And if it gets sales, it's a good thing." It is unclear if the case has been settled. Q: Is the de Rham cohomology of the complex of sheaves on $\mathcal{M}_g$ isomorphic to Deligne cohomology? Let $\mathcal{M}_g$ be the moduli stack of compact Riemann surfaces of genus g. Then one has a stratification by normal varieties. What can be said about the de Rham cohomology of the complex of sheaves on $\mathcal{M}_g$ restricted to the normal varieties? Is it isomorphic to Deligne cohomology? A: Yes, the Hodge structure on the first Deligne cohomology group is also the Hodge structure on the de Rham cohomology group of a stack, by using integration over the inertia stack. In fact, the theory of inertial categories on stacks, developed by Deligne in (Deligne 1983), shows a correspondence between extensions of stacks and Hodge

The players' territories spread across the gorgeous board. Cards are being drawn. Not an easy task, but anyone can learn it, if you want to explore this fascinating science-fiction inspired board game! You have the option of playing a single player game against the computer or connecting to a multiplayer game with friends and family. The main goal of the game is to build the most powerful house on the board.You start with your own house. The more houses you have on the board the more tiles the game board expands into North, South, East and West. You can buy additional houses with the income you collect. Once you own one or more houses on the board, you have to expand your House territory to the North. There you should build houses, upgrade them and also expand to the North. You can't place houses on a tile that is already owned. Then you have to pass by South. Just a few tiles of land there. But with the same rules, your goal is still to expand as fast as you can! It's a good idea to expand to the East first, though. That way you can build houses for your Colony, which starts with only one house. But the Colony benefits from any North, South, East or West expansion. And there is no limit to how many houses you can build. Once you have constructed two or more houses in North, you have to start building again in South. This also sets the basis for a whole new game. If you win, you can then continue the game. If you loose, you have to start over again at the beginning. There are two main goals to try to achieve: build the most productive house and expand as fast as possible. I was acutely aware as a child of seeing pictures of organs in jars or mounted on cork board, and thinking in a sad, dumb, repetitive way: "I'm inside of her. She's inside of me." What kind of monster would make a baby!? She's inside of me?! • This lead to my first pretend-science project. I examined each element, tried to work out their purpose. It was the beginning of a lifelong fascination with taking apart and building up again. • I've been fascinated since childhood by the fact that, when we put food into our mouths, the basic foods we eat – meat, fruits, vegetables, all types of grains – one by one, as they fall through the cracks of our digestive system (carefully avoiding harm, too, thanks to our innate defense system, the immune system), eventually find themselves in the bloodstream. Cuts of meat become red blood cells. Hidden in a tomato are four straws, transporting – from me to you – iron, phosphorus, vitamin C, and water. Many cells in any animal live off the blood, taking in the nutrients it has stored to chew food into life, to grow, to heal, to work, to reproduce. • I wonder if this ever stops me from being startled when the neighbor pulls his truck into my driveway before I can stop him, or when there's a bump in the middle of the night, or when my phone gets cranked up by voicemail or breathless text. I wonder if I have some sort of diminished "listening" ability, because I don't tune in to the sounds of these events. I think I

TTRPG Design Guide In the game, where medieval fantasy meets the magic of sorcery. Can you bring down the dark lord's evil army? Fantasy Strategy A game of magical encounters, epic campaigns and epic battles. Journey of Legends Take part in the legendary adventures of the TTRPG - Legacy of Kain. The TTRPG-Legacy of Kain is an award winning Rollplaying Game developed by Trillium Games, a German game studio which was founded in 2000 and now has more than 30 employees working in all areas of game development. The Cold War At the beginning of the Cold War the United States and the Soviet Union each had a strong and well-equipped army. Despite this, it was an uneasy peace for the nations of the world. The question of who is the strongest nation of the world is a sort of game within the game, which takes place during this period, and which shows how good and strong you are, if you can maintain your own army against a strong army. But this game has a global extension: The world of the Cold War is the game world. This world is based on a Topographic map, which shows the countries of the earth in every detail (including the oceans and the borders). That map has a small size and a real world vision. In the game the different countries have specific parts of the map: The Allies are on the West Coast and a lot of South America. In the western part of the East Coast there are occupied by the Soviets. On the eastern part of the East Coast there is an island, which is controlled by the US and which is called the Island of the Free Man. The Soviet Navy can destroy the island and therefore the US Navy can't do anything about it. Only the United States and the Soviet Union can be the dominant countries in the world. The game is nearly a pure PvP game. Once you start the game you lose all of your points, which you've gained from the previous game. You don't even lose your points if you die, that would simply be a matter of luck. The whole game is played with a Topographic map. On that map you can place military units: buildings, forces, cities, airfields, offices, garrisons and many more. Each of the military units is a kind of private game. It is possible to assign one or more victory points to the buildings, forces and many other units. There are two ways to score
