Flashback to 2015. A squadron of game journalists has gathered in New York for a round-robin post-E3 party. Six huge name games are expected. Every year. This might be the first and last time they all agree on a title: J-dub's Ninja Gaiden III - Razor's Edge (I'm including this game for nostalgia's sake as I literally haven't played since it's original Japan release 23 years ago.)The other games were still TBA, but loads of rumors were already out there. Some of the titles floated included Metal Gear Rising: Revengeance, Underworld Ascendant, Hotline Miami 2, and Elder Scrolls Online. Now the party is crashed by somebody in the midst that isn't a game journalist, somebody who was at the show and had regular, if small, access to the games in question. All day. All week. For good reason. They dumped on Shinji Mikami's new supernatural action title Quantum Break. The worst game of all time it was. It was a blatant stealth demo, which disappointed PlayStation 4 owners and mainstream gaming fans. All the press on it were not talking about this. They were talking about: the poor Xbox One reviews; the lack of multiplatform critics prepping with their previous work; Electronic Arts' (looking to get invited to E3) detailed plans for "teasing" The Division's content; the same words for Xbox One again; their lack of prettiness - to the press and public. I commented on that post that the most underappreciated thing about this announcement was the date. September 20th, 2014, is when Quantum Break was announced. In just over a month Microsoft's previous generation Xbox One will go out of service, and so will Sony's. This was the exact moment when both Sony and Microsoft "looked for the right moment to extend a hand" to their dying console. The One has less than year before it became obsolete, and Microsoft was trying to get the mainstream's attention before it's last possible console run. But nobody cared. The press writes and reports on what they want, and from what I've seen, the specter of the PlayStation 4 has always loomed large over this generation of gaming. In fact, Microsoft may simple game for android. It's working now, but I want to have a portrait mode. How can I do that? A: I think a better approach would be to create 2 layouts. One for landscape and one for portrait. This way you get the benefit of each orientation in the fastest way possible, and the same resources are used. Hope this helps. [Impact of hyperhomocysteinemia on oxidative stress level in patients with arterial hypertension]. Introduction: is hyperhomocysteinemia observed in patients with arterial hypertension is accompanied by dysregulation of reactive oxygen and nitrogen species (ROS), which could be responsible for pathogenesis of vascular and hemodynamic disorders in this group of patients. The aim: the study included a group of 90 patients with primary hypertension (mean age 56.6 ± 1.1 years). The study used the following methods: the determination of homocysteine, advanced oxidation protein products (AOPP) and total antioxidant capacity (TAC) to assess the level of oxidative stress and the measurement of the hemodynamic parameters--central venous pressure (CVP) and central aortic pressure (AOPP) to determine the cardiac and vascular resistance. The study included a group of 90 patients with primary hypertension (mean age 56.6 ± 1.1 years) enrolled to the study. Results: the average concentration of homocysteine in patients with arterial hypertension was 11.21 ± 0.63 $\mu\text{mol/l}$. In spite of the fact that we observed a significant correlation between the level of homocysteine and the severity of arterial hypertension, there was no statistically significant difference in the concentration of homocysteine between the groups of patients with different blood pressure in the follow-up. The average concentration of AOPP in the blood of patients with arterial hypertension was 0.60 ± 0.03 $\mu\text{mol/l}$. These data indicate an oxidative stress (OS) of moderate intensity in the patients with arterial hypertension. The average concentration of TAC was 1.77 ± 0.05 mmol/L. There were no statistically significant differences in the concentration of AOPP and TAC between the group of patients with normal
