PerkinElmer PhicoClick .Q: How to separate the callout to Excel spreadsheet via Rest API I'm looking for a way to generate callout to Excel spreadsheet. I already use the Rest API in my project. It generated a JSON from Excel sheets. [ { "calloutid": "id1", "title": "sample title", "notes": "sample notes" }, { "calloutid": "id1", "title": "sample title", "notes": "sample notes" } ] But how to separate them in Excel sheet? A: The response that you are getting is because you are using the single quote for all the values. If you look at the Excel sheet that you are getting the JSON response, it will have the following format: I have highlighted the single quotes and how to escape them. This can be done in the Excel sheet by using this format: In the cell, place this formula and hit Enter. Q: How to implement Lazy Sequence in C++11 I am working with C++11 in Eclipse and so far I have used the raw pointer as a variable to store data. There is no need to specialize the type to store a list or a sequence. It is possible to call the [] operator and therefore the C++11 addition of the Sequence Container template class. My question is whether I am missing an abstraction and how this abstraction can be implemented. E.g. there must be a function for pushing_back, which isn't implemented in the builtin sequence because it is a C++11 extension and not yet in the Standard. The push_back operation "automatically" deletes the appropriate back element and allocates a new one. I think this is typical for a sequence container, but never developed one myself. Does anyone have experience implementing one?
