Share Your Thoughts.Surrey College, Cambridge Surrey College is one of the colleges of the University of Cambridge. Surrey College dates back to the fourteenth century, and it is one of the three constituent colleges at the University. Since the University split into colleges in 1920, its name has been used by two of the colleges. History The original college was founded in 1343, when seven Cambridge Scholarships were endowed for the benefit of seven of the University Scholars. The college takes its name from the county of Surrey, where seven of the former student benefactors came from. Early history The college was established by Henry III for the original seven scholars, beginning with Richard of Rochester. The other six were joined by John Davers, Henry of Wykes, William of Gloucester, John of Reading, John of Kent and

William of Essex. The Master of the College was once the Chancellor of the University, but this was reduced to the lesser office of Vice-Chancellor in the 1920s, though it has been held by various Chancellors of the University since that time. The Master is an ex officio Fellow of the college. On the college's list of alumni is the famous biochemist, Sir Ernst Chain, who won the 1939 Nobel Prize in Chemistry for his work with methionine. The college's coat of arms, which it has used for many years, was designed by the College's first Warden, the Dean of Ely, Richard Peche, and the arms were granted in 1625 by King Charles I to the Warden and Fellows of the college. The Latin motto of the arms is Sub Phocis Solem et Cito, meaning as quickly as possible under the protection of the Phocaeans, a reference to the Island of Britain. A number of famous students have passed through the college. Richard of Gloucester, poet Geoffrey Chaucer, the humanist Erasmus, and King Edward

IV were associated with the college, but the most famous student of the college is probably Sir Isaac Newton, who was a Fellow in 1668–1669. Newton studied at the college under the Warden Richard Bentley. Newton's successor as Warden of the College was his friend Robert Smith, who later married Newton's daughter. Downturn The college declined in the late eighteenth century
