Adding a resource pack to Fogger is super easy, and you have already seen us set up a custom resource pack in the previous Fogger tutorial. If you are still new to using packagers, here is a quick reminder of how a resource pack works: Figure 1 - Initial Fogger installation The following picture shows a new installation of Fogger with no resource packs added: Figure 2 - Initial Fogger installation Now that we have a basic understanding of how the Fogger packager works, let's talk about adding a resource pack to Fogger. If you take a peek at our Fogger configuration file, you will notice that we have already added two default resource packs to the config file: Figure 3 - default resource packs added Those two resource packs were already added to our default configuration file, and we can easily see where those packagers live by opening the packager_config

(AP) - No drilling in the Gulf of Mexico is taking place. But the Obama administration is finally getting into the permitting business, pulling the plug on two commercial, deepwater drilling projects in the Gulf. The first is called America's Energy Port in Louisiana, where BP and other oil companies are working to reopen a shuttered, but supposedly just-finished, drilling rig that was shut down after the April 2010 BP spill. The other is called Neptune Energy's Julia project, in a location about 500 miles south of the Deepwater Horizon rig's blown-out well. Their permit requests were among 17,500 that have been dropped by the Interior Department since last May. The Interior Department pulled the plug on the two projects in an internal memo earlier this month, saying that the Obama administration doesn't want to take any more risks in the Gulf of Mexico. Leaflets are being circulated across the 11 affected states to inform residents and business owners of the change, said Carrie Campbell of the Department of the Interior's Bureau of Ocean Energy Management. "We are in the process of analyzing the environmental, economic, regulatory and social aspects of the six pending permit applications," wrote Michael Bromwich, assistant secretary for environmental and natural resources, in an accompanying letter. Neither the Interior nor the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, which is the enforcement arm of the Deepwater Horizon incident, will keep an eye on the companies drilling in the area, Campbell said. "No economic development will occur until the industry 6d1f23a050
