Shoutcast Station.The present invention relates to a system and method for simulating various vehicle maintenance tasks and, more particularly, to a system and method for simulating various vehicle maintenance tasks using a software platform. Vehicle manufacturers commonly provide an on-board diagnostic (OBD) port to monitor various internal vehicle functions. However, many manufacturers of vehicles such as, for example, luxury automobiles, view the OBD port as little more than a monitor port, in which information related to the performance of the vehicle is generated and stored within the vehicle's on-board computer system. As such, these vehicle manufacturers do not provide a way in which to perform various vehicle maintenance tasks. In other words, there are currently no known methods for simulating various vehicle maintenance tasks using the OBD port., and a receiver. Electrical energy is transmitted from the transmitter to the receiver via a conductive coil. When the rod begins to move, the transmitter is activated, causing a spark to jump between the transmitter and the rod. As the rod accelerates, the spark makes its way to the receiver, which causes a small electric current to flow. This electric current produces a measurable signal that can be detected by the response sensors. This sensing system can be used for many types of security devices, such as garage door openers, electric door or gate openers, and motion sensors to monitor living areas for burglary. Infrared video Infrared video systems utilize infrared detectors. The source of the infrared radiation is a video camera or infrared light emitting diode. The video camera is usually triggered automatically by the motion sensors. The infrared light source is usually used as part of a heating system. For example, it would shine light
