Changes in the distribution and number of thrombocytes within the feline intestine were examined in 32 cats in a neutropenic stasis model. The cats were treated with vincristine at a daily rate of 1.2 mg/kg for 7-10 days. Small intestinal thrombocytes and leucocytes were quantitated by flow cytometry using a technique which allows for identification and quantitation of the two cell types individually. Thrombocytes were present at a significantly higher density in the mucosa of the duodenum and jejunum, but at a lower density in the ileum compared to the duodenum and jejunum. After neutropenic stasis the thrombocyte density was significantly lower in the small intestine and the thrombocyte distribution within the intestine was significantly altered. Thus, neutropenic stasis is a model for thrombocytopenic disease. Transparent Conductive Tapes for Electronics TCE is an adhesive manufactured by chemical companies worldwide, including 3M, The assignee of the present invention. TCE has been manufactured in the United States since 1957. TCE adhesive has been widely used for many decades in the electronics industry. The adhesive is useful for attaching plastic films to a variety of products, such as metalized Mylar and polyethylene Teflon, for housing computer components, for adhering various plastic films to circuit boards and for encapsulating or sealing electronic products. The adherent tape has high adhesion to the substrate, is flexible and can be applied using a wide variety of automated and manual processes.
