face-to-face. This time in FIFA 15 we're going to take a big step forward. You will be able to play with teams from real world, but that's not all. FIFA 15 is all about innovation. New engine makes the game incredibly realistic: views of the stadiums and the nature around "yours" in FIFA 15 - from the stadiums to the nature - have been updated with Real Player Motion technology. This technology animates 16,000 virtual athletes and six times more than in previous versions, made possible by the use of a unique SDK. So, you'll be able to watch the players' movements during the match: they will move faster and be able to perform more accurate feints. The developers also promise that the technology will help fans to see the game in detail. In particular, you will be able to see players' eyes, movements and facial expressions in detail. "We're thrilled that Microsoft has joined Havok, and we're confident that the next generation of the game will be one of the most beautiful in the world," commented Mark Pilger, head of development at Havok Vision Systems. Unfortunately, there's no release date for Havok for the Xbox 360 yet. Things are better in the case of the handheld version - the game has already appeared in Japan. Havok Vision Games promises to release a demo version of Havok for Xbox 360 in the first quarter of 2008. We will tell you about it in the next press release, though. In the meantime we have a video for you to watch: about the author Guns Edit | Profile | Post | Quote | Report to moderator

In December 2006, Havok Software announced the "open source" of its graphics engine. It was probably a pretty high-profile event, since Havok is one of the two major "players" in the 3D industry. And when it was announced it blew my mind: it opens a new dimension: nobody would have to go to Microsoft to get all his graphics technology under Linux! Havok was at the time, according to the developers, used in 30% of games for personal computers. Including Windows, but also Mac OS games.
