These clips are saved inside a FFT editor, and the player may play the sound clip later on. For recording, I was expecting to achieve a similar effect to what was proposed in this video (2:16), except that I am using Unity's FFT instead of DirectX for sound analysis (based on this blog post). Unity's FFT has a bug when saving that is hard to figure out. The issue happens when the camera is moved while playing or recording the sound clip. Note that there is a very similar question here, but it doesn't answer the question. A: I found a workaround for the problem, but it's not a good one. The plugin c6a93da74d
