They formed in 1990 and disbanded in 1996. History Elder's initial line-up consisted of founding members Jeff Lironi (vocals, guitar) and Matt Geronda (vocals, keyboards) and later expanded to include Tim Gill (bass guitar) and Steve Kuhr (drums). The band's name is a reference to the American Indian folklore of "elders" and "children". Elder's first release was a 7" single, produced by their then-sophomore year buddy Dan Jackson, on the Evergreen label with songs "Skydancer" and "Owl's Nest". The same year they released the album, Energy Shaped in..., on Jackson's Strictly Rhythm label. This album was essentially a blueprint for all future Elder releases, as it featured a more aggressive sound and more raw vocals than previous releases. While this new sound was somewhat embraced by the progressive rock community, it was less so by the mainstream. In 1992, the band released their second LP, Skydancer, as well as the EP, Soul Power. The following year, the band released their third LP, Golden State. Golden State featured the single "Nothing To Lose", which later appeared in the movie Star Trek: Insurrection. As the four wrote more and more, they decided to release the songs on a CD, titled, Old and New. But by the time they released it, the label had changed its name, and it would be almost a year before it would be released by Arista Records. In 1995, Elder released a best-of collection, Future, and followed it up with a live album, Live In San Francisco, recorded in 1995. The band's next release was an album, Force of Nature, which was also their last. Live performances Elder was one of the more popular live acts of the 1990s. Live c6a93da74d
