Elise Sutton Procedure

Many people suffer from a variety of complications related to vision because of ophthalmic diseases such as malignant glaucoma. In the ophthalmologist's office or an emergency room, trabeculectomy is a frequently performed surgical procedure for managing glaucoma [ 34 35 ]. Elise graduated from East Carolina University with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Business in 2005. She went on to receive her Masters in Business Administration degree from North Carolina State University in 2008. This semester, I designed a course specifically to support the health of our residents. I have been struggling with three issues: I am not a medical doctor, I am not a resident, but I can help. What's more, when I teach something, I find that a great number of medical doctors know more about the subject than I do. The problem is that many of them are unwilling or unable to teach my undergraduate students anything useful because they lack knowledge in the subject themselves. I decided to take on the role of a clinical teacher. I have developed a way to teach medical science and simply by telling stories and showing videos, I have been able to teach a non-expert how to do a basic medical procedure. I believe that I can use the concepts behind pedagogy (the process of teaching) to learn the techniques and empower people to teach themselves and one another. The pathophysiology of cytotoxic edema is still unclear and, therefore, traumatic brain injury (TBI) patients may have multiple injury mechanisms. We propose to develop a new methodology to determine the presence of cell components in brain tissue samples. By combining complementary techniques, we will study the physiological and pathological features of cytotoxic edema by correlating the spatial distribution of cell components, with a colorimetric proteomic assay, and the spreading of edema induced by traumatic insult. The combination of in vitro and in vivo experimental procedures will allow us to understand the involvement of (sialo-) proteic factors in the disruption of the cellular membrane of brain cells. Such knowledge will allow us to implement more specific therapeutic interventions.
