there are a few things you need to know about auditions. first, most casting directors will not schedule you for a callback if you do not get an offer. second, the audition process is different for every production, so you need to read up on the show you are auditioning for so you can tailor your audition to the types of roles you are trying to get. third, the casting office is not your agent, and they are not responsible for getting you work. if you are willing to work with a casting director, you will need to be prepared to audition, as all casting directors are booked months in advance. the casting office is responsible for scheduling the auditions, but they will not be making the decisions on which role you are cast in. finally, a lot goes into casting decisions. auditions are not a mechanical process, and casting directors will have plenty of factors to consider when making casting decisions. any actor who is told they are not right for the part they have auditioned for will have to make other choices in their careers. a casting directors assistant will call you back with feedback. there is no way to predict if youre going to get a callback. but when you do get the call, you want to make sure youre prepared. there are thousands of other acts out there to audition, so it may take a long time before you get a callback. if youre too nervous to rehearse, theres not much you can do. many performers share a performing ritual. if youre like me, you go to a comedy club, get a free drink, and see if there are any open spots on the schedule. if youre lucky, youll get a couple of weeks of paid gigs. if youre not, you wont get paid and youll be forced to re-audition. theres really no way around it. 5ec8ef588b
