where you get to choose between some of the Windows Embedded OEM preinstalled images (like Microsoft OneCare, Microsoft Error Reporting, etc), as well as the Windows Embedded Server Advanced Option Pack, and the Base Windows Embedded Server Advanced Option Pack (if you want to have all that in your image). Lastly, you can choose between the Windows Embedded 8.1 IP1 preview "Minux". The preview version is kind of a "beta" version, and does not have as much functionalities and SDK / other tools as the final version, but it works just fine, and is much more stable than any other Windows Embedded 8.1 IP. Once done, you can select the default installation path. This path will then be displayed on the bootscreen of the Minux. You can also check the local BIOS to make sure the correct SATA/IDE configuration is selected, or change it if it is wrong. If you want to keep your Windows install as small as possible, the recommended option is to disable the installation of Windows update / anti-malware tool, and to disable the need for User Account Control (UAC). Anyways, once the installation is done, you can choose between OEM / Server or a custom installation. Then comes the upgrade, and you need to choose whether you want to upgrade from an already working Windows Embedded 8.1 operating system (OEM or already-working server), or from another newer operating system version (another "beta" version, or the "Minux" version). If you want to upgrade from another Windows Embedded 8.1 beta version, you should choose the "Minux" version. Then the wizard will ask for details about the target computer you want to upgrade to (your already existing one is always set in the default). After that, the wizard will display the upgrade sequence. You can start it by choosing "Begin upgrade". Otherwise, the wizard may be launched automatically once the update is finished. 5ec8ef588b
