In-vivo absorption of some hexose sugar analogues in rat intestine. In-vivo absorption of some monosaccharide analogues, which were substituted in different positions of glucose or galactose molecules, was studied in the isolated perfused rat small intestine by means of both in-vivo and in-vitro intestinal absorption techniques. Intestinal absorption of these compounds in-vivo was measured using the surface area and the net disappearance rate of [¹⁴C]sucrose as parameters. Analogues of glucose and galactose in various positions of the molecule and 2,3,4-tri-O-acetyl-6-O-(2,3,4,6-tetra-O-acetyl-beta-D-galactopyranosyl)-D-glucopyranose, an analogue of glucose in position 4 were tested. Absorption in-vivo of glucose in position 2 and 4 was high, while that of galactose in position 2, 3 and 4 was extremely low. The in-vivo absorption of glucose derivatives in position 1, 4 and 6 was extremely low. The in-vivo absorption of glucose derivatives in position 3 was moderately low. Absorption in-vivo of a glucopyranose derivative in position 4 was much lower than that of glucose. The in-vivo absorption of galactopyranose derivatives in position 2, 3 and 4 was extremely low, while that of the galactopyranose derivative in position 6 was moderately low
