What's New in the One Click App Killer?

A small and handy application that can do much more. You can double-click to target an application. Double click again, and this application will kill it. Click once again, and this application will bring you back to the desktop. By default, the mouse cursor becomes a target-like cursor. With this very small utility you can kill you freezed programs with one click. For example you double-click on it's icon, the target-like cursor show-up, then on the next program you click, it's terminated. We've took the idea from UNIX world, where people use Xkill. Basically, this utility is a windows clone of Xkill. Last updated: 2006-03-09 17:30:24 Notes: This program is very small and should not take more space. If you run out of disk space, please remove unused files. Compilation : Just place this file in the "program files" folder and use the "binary" utility. License: Read the license.txt Not a problem. df Michael Terraso 03/07/2000 01:41 PM To: Drew Fossum/ET&S/Enron@ENRON cc: Susan Scott/ET&S/Enron@ENRON Subject: EOL HUB / EOL LOOP TEST Drew, I had a minor issue with the EOL hub site, and was wondering if the EOL loops could be tested next week. Could we set up a test site? If you would, that would be great. Thanks. The screenplay by Alan Plater was based on a story by Sean Barrett. Plot John Tristan (Tom Bell) and John Kane (John Bird) are two young men who are sent to an American prison on a manslaughter conviction. When they are released, Tristan goes back to the United Kingdom. Meanwhile, John Kane is an office worker who has been manipulated into becoming a drug dealer by a cocaine-snorting colleague who is in fact an undercover police officer, as part of an operation against organised crime. After his arrest, Kane is convicted of importing cocaine and sent to prison for six years. While in prison
