Human bladder smooth muscle was used to assess the possible role of cAMP-dependent protein kinase in mediating the effects of phenylephrine (PE), a calcium channel agonist. A concentration-response curve for the effects of PE on isometric tension of human detrusor smooth muscle was constructed. The relationship between tension and $[Ca^{2+}]_o$ (caffeine-induced contraction), or between tension and the activator concentration of cyclic AMP-dependent protein kinase (cAMP-PK), was studied to determine if cyclic AMP-PK is involved in mediating the effects of PE. The EC₅₀ for PE was approximately 3 microM. The presence of 10(-5) M PE shifted the concentration-response curve for $[Ca^{2+}]_o$ to the left; the EC₅₀ for $[Ca^{2+}]_o$ was 6.6 +/- 1.4 mM in the presence of 10(-5) M PE (n = 10). This shift was not attenuated by 0.2 mM exogenous calmodulin (n = 4). No activation of cyclic AMP-PK was observed in muscle strips incubated with 10(-5) M PE (n = 4). Although an effect of PE on smooth muscle is dependent on the activation of calcium channels, cyclic AMP-PK does not appear to be the primary effector of the action of this agent in human detrusor smooth muscle. { "extends": ["tslint-config-json-file", "tslint-config-prettier"], "rules": { "object-literal-sort-keys": false, "no-var-requires": false, "trailing-comma": [false, { "multiline": "always", "singleline": "never" }], "quotemark": [true, "single"], "indent": [false, 4], "max-
