My daughter is 8 and has been participating in a school project with a group of 6 year olds where we make miniatures out of bamboo skewers, toothpicks, cardboard boxes and construction paper. As we've worked on it I found out that I can use quite a few tools that are not really aimed at kids and I can use a range of materials that I would have to pay a lot to buy. Here's a link to the YouTube video that my daughter made to show what we've been doing. Love the idea of the shim, I haven't seen any yet (though it's possible I've not looked hard enough...) I would really like to do something with the flip top idea, I've been wondering if I could make a stand for my painting stuff, I'd need something that would make me stand it up but lock it so that it doesn't fall over. I was thinking of making the stand with 3 of those fridge plastic things that are used to keep eggs/bread cool when they're in the back of the fridge, but they have to be unwrapped to make a stand, I think I could make something that needs to be unwrapped that would fit in that space. I don't think I'd be bothered with making the stands, I'd use them and then discard them, they're not really that useful. I know that some people use clipboards as stands (ie. if I don't want to try and get the stand to fit on the shelf on its own, I can just clip the sheet to the clipboard). 2edc1e01e8

Every time I see a Fox 'News' article I have to sigh and ask myself, what is the dumbest thing they've said? Here's one, from April, about the 'Stolen Election' meme, and Hillary Clinton's popularity: In a new opinion poll, 58 percent of likely voters say they think the November election was "stolen" from Hillary Clinton and want a new election, but only 17 percent say they have strong confidence in the outcome of the election and just 9 percent say they have a lot of confidence in the election results, according to a new poll from Quinnipiac University. Not only is the election results not a secret, the vote count is public record. The whole idea is so ridiculous it deserves at least one funny picture: Still, the Democrats keep at it. Here's the best example I've seen so far: Hillary Clinton's popularity Here she is, at her home town of Burlington, Ontario in her new book. She's talking about her hard work, etc, and then it gets to this: A few days later, the mayor of Burlington read from the book about Hillary's fight to end a terrible killer of women: "Our daughter, our sister, our best friend." Mayor Lisa Helps said. "She had been treated so unfairly." The mayor explained
