Q: asp.net core Mvc routing error I have a weird problem: I created a new ASP.NET Core MVC 2.2 web application on visual studio (not the RC). Then on a command line I've created a controller with a default action and I've run the project with the following command: dotnet aspnet-mycontroller.dll But when I try to access the test page /test I get the error cannot find assembly'myproject.Infrastructure.MyController' It seems like the routing is broken or something. So I opened the project in VS and changed the project's startup class to public class Startup { public IConfiguration Configuration { get; } public Startup(IConfiguration configuration) { Configuration = configuration; } public void ConfigureServices(IServiceCollection services) { // other code services.AddMvc(); } public void Configure(IApplicationBuilder app) { // other code app.UseMvc(); } } ...and the same error. What am I missing? Update: I have a class in the project that looks like this: public class ApplicationUserManager : ApplicationUserManager { public ApplicationUserManager(IUserStore store) : base(store) { } } And I've added the code directly into the Main() method: services.AddSingleton(new ApplicationUserManager(new MyUserStore(Context.Options.Token))); I also started to doubt the wrong version of asp.net core. A: The problem was that I was using .NET Core 2.

Is there a way to get this working in C++? The requirement is that I have to include another header file as a constant(its constant variables). I checked this link, but unfortunately it does not work for C++. I want to do the following Sharing a header file with all other files Adding some constant variables Import those constant variables to other files The following is my sample code. // Header File(a) #include #define constant a class A { public: void aFunction(){ std::cout class A { public: void aFunction(){ std::cout <
