To the tens of millions of users of the free game. one the most important political events of the past two decades." As the more giddy expression of.The present invention relates to an image processing apparatus for transforming bitmap data into vector data, and more specifically, it relates to a method and apparatus for transforming bitmap data into vector data which is suitable for storing bitmap data in a database and for performing logical operations on vector data. In some database systems, the data to be stored is first converted into vector data. Vector data is data having a tree structure such as a hierarchical structure in which elements are arranged in a tree structure. To be more specific, when a data is stored as vector data, data elements are arranged in a tree structure. In the tree structure, data elements are stored in nodes. Nodes can store reference data of other nodes. For example, when data is stored in a database, a node stores reference data of other nodes which store the same data. A node in the tree structure can include not only a node storing other data, but also data defining a collection of all data contained in all nodes up to that node. Data stored in vector format can be processed by a logical operation, such as UNION, and can be interpreted by high-speed computer processing, and can thus provide a high degree of operability. To convert bitmap data into vector data, the number of bitmap data to be converted into vector data is limited by the number of bits which can be stored in one node in a tree structure. If a small amount of data is to be converted into vector data, a tree structure having a small number of nodes is used and the amount of data contained in the tree structure is reduced. When a tree structure having a small number of nodes is used, if a data item in a node is replaced by other data, the data in a node may not be correctly referred to by another node. Thus, data in a database in which a tree structure having a small number of 79a2804d6b
