How to implement the multiple inheritance of interfaces in Java I am trying to write a card game where, given a card and a player, each card and player needs to perform an action. The actions can be defined by a interface. My issue is that I need to give the player and the card a method that invokes the correct action. For example, the card needs to know how to play the game, and the player needs to know how to play a card. The cards can be played by a number of players, and the players can also be in different groups, such that a group of players can be the players for a specific card. The player information is defined by an enum. How can I define this? I want the action, on the card, to be the generic type that can be used with all players, and the actions on the player should be used with the group of players that the card belongs to. Here is an example of the actions that I want: public interface CardAction { // Specific to the Action void execute(); } public interface

PlayerAction { // Specific to the Action void execute(); } public class Card implements CardAction, PlayerAction { // Card specific methods // action void execute() { // Action specific methods // ... } // Player action void execute() { // Player specific methods // ... } } public class Player { // player specific methods // ... } public enum PlayerGroup { // Players that play a specific card PLAYER1,
