Initial release. Q: Is there a way to make my SVN to reflect the status of a webpage automatically? Basically, I have a large, external website that has a complex set of PHP code. At the moment, I have the PHP code stored in a GitHub repo, and I have to update the website and the PHP code at the same time. I was wondering if there is a way to automatically make the website reflect the PHP code? I was thinking something like if there is a commit, it could automatically pull the code, and update the site to reflect the changes. I'm not really sure if this is possible, so I was wondering if anyone has any suggestions on how I could accomplish this? A: I would suggest you do the following: Create a website and domain that only you will access Add the entire website to a repository, but only the parts that you want to edit When you want to update the website, simply clone the repo to the web server.

A case of vascular leiomyoma in the lateral vaginal wall. A case of a vascular leiomyoma of the lateral vaginal wall in a 39-year-old woman, associated with hemorrhagic discharge, is reported. The tumor was palpable and measured 6 x 6 x 3 cm in size. Histologically, it was a solid and cystic mass and was composed of characteristic subcutaneous smooth muscle bundles with admixed dilated blood vessels. The tumor was closely adhered to the rectum and inguinal hernia sac. Immunohistochemically, it contained vimentin, alpha-smooth muscle actin, and muscle-specific actin, but was negative for desmin and S-100 protein. Our findings suggest that the tumor was derived from smooth muscle in the vaginal wall.
