In an interview with CNBC on Tuesday, Soros said the Trump Administration was "bringing up, in my opinion, some very weak, illegal, positions" by making it "more difficult for people to come to this country." "They're using these sabre-rattling tactics to scare people into doing what they want them to do," he added. "I believe that they're going to hurt their own cause." The "scare tactics" included a new rule on "contractors" allowing for greater enforcement and a shift away from passive enforcement that would rely on employers and the businesses they operate to notify the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency about undocumented workers, according to the New York Times. More than 3.8 million people have been living here illegally, according to a report on the Department of Homeland Security and Citizenship and Immigration Services' future directions. Soros, a billionaire investor and philanthropist, has been a vocal opponent of President Donald Trump, in particular his administration's handling of immigration, funding cuts to social programs and the border
