Download, Polycyclic Aromatic Hydrocarbons (PAHs) in surf-cast, surf-break and mixedtemperature sand beaches along the Southern Algarve coast (Portugal): Data from Pre-sampling Laboratory and Field experiments. This paper presents the results of our field and laboratory studies to investigate the behaviour of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) in relation to the morphology and temperature of the beach sand, and is the first to report data from a surf-cast, surf-break and mixed-temperature beach. PAHs were more concentrated in the surf-cast than the surf-break, probably due to their raintransported nature. All beaches presented a potential risk for human exposure due to their PAH concentrations; in particular, beaches with surf-cast show higher concentrations, although with different behaviour depending on the beach morphology. All beaches showed higher levels of PAHs in summer (October), compared with winter. Managing the human resources of the 1.5 million children of Mexico City. Of Mexico's 29 million people, one-third are children, of which approximately 1.5 million live in Mexico City. A single exposure to air pollution or reduced access to clean water may have disproportionate effects in the largest urban population in the world. This article discusses the challenges of managing the human resources in the 1.5 million children of Mexico City, a city with the highest levels of air pollution in the world. One of the first challenges is to optimize resources to meet
