If the new interface is a steaming pile of mud, the new features in CS6 Elements range from the merely useful to the downright bizarre. For example, the new, newly exposed "HDR Mode" (to be released as a standalone plugin for Allegorithmic Photoshop for Mac in a month or so) gives you the ability to add an "exposure," "contrast," and "gamma" sliders without the need for add-on elements, but that's the whole point as far as I'm concerned. And, to be honest, no big fan of HDR anyway.

I have been a loyal user of PS since it was first introduced in 1991, using PS v5.5.5 - 5.6.8 in it's various forms. "Face" recognition, though not all its brothers, have always been quickly tapped to do it's thing. I personally find the image stabilizing tech very useful, and of course, the cloning feature is well worth the effort to do it again. So, I admit that I'm not a fan of some of the new features, like the initial embark on AI editing. However, the new features it adds should raise the level of editing with new high-end needs for PS.

I'm five years in and I love the Cloud....I have all my photos and PSDs stored there. I do have to buy the Plus package for $9.99/mo. but if I didn't, I would use this product from Adobe. I only use projects that I want others to see and edit. This is my main editing product. I've been using PS since v 1990, and a die-hard for some years now. I love the look of the new interface. I did not much like the look of PS6, but its performance and editing was excellent. I do perceive that it may have been geared more to "making money" instead of "giving the customer what they want".
